KOSSUTH IN OLD AGE

Forthcoming Celebration of His Ninetieth Birthday.

RECORD OF A PATRIOT'S LIFE

He is Visited at His Home in Turin. Austria will be Pinally Disintegrated. Hungaria to be Free.

Louis Ressuth, the nungarian patriot, will celebrate his nicetiath birthday in few weeks' time. It might be more correct to say that his countrymen, rather than Keesuth himself, will colerate the anniversary. For almost a arter of a contary the aged patriot passed a life of entire seclusion in his retreat at Turin, in Italy. To him the pomp and circumstance of public ceremonial has long cented to present any interest or menning, and though he still watches keenly the course of antional affairs all over the world, his mind has become tinged by an intense-ly philosophical sleepiicity which has destroyed his nest for the glitter and excitement of the fleeting show. Not that he has become a pessimist—on the contrary, he believes more than ever in the ultimate regeneration of Hungarian nationality. The forthcoming event of Kossuth's ninetieth birthday will be one of no small importance in the eyes of his compatriots, who will flock to Twein from all parts of Hungary to preseat him with the honorary citizenship of his native land. Kossuth, two years ago, ceased to be a political citizen of Hungary, for at that time he became subject to the law which declares that all Hungarian exties who shall remain absent for a period of ten years without reporting themselves to any consul or minister of 'Austro-Hungary, shall be held to have forfeited their citizenship.

I met Louis Kossuth at Turin nearly three years ago. After Solferino, when Austria's eagles were low in the dust, Victor Emanueland Count Cavour made formal offers to Kossuth of a residence in Italy, accompanied by assurances of the sincere admiration and friendship of the Italian king and minister. At length he made up his mind to settle in Italy, where he has lived ever since and will probably end his days, for I have heard m say that only in the event of Hungary's complete national emancipation would be ever consent to return. Prominent among those who will visit him upon his approaching birthday are three arms, ... ribur Gorgery and Gens. Turr and Klapka, who fought at his side in 1849 during the almost successful struggle for their country's independence. It was Gorgery who surrendered at Villagos with his army of fifty thousand Hungarian patriots to the allied forces of Austria and Russia. Gen. Turr, like is great leader, has found a refuge in Italy, having long held a good position in the Italian army, and being married to a Bonapartist princess. These veter ans, the last survivers of their gallant band, are quite aged now, and the spectacle of their reunion with Kosers on the last decade of one hundred ears of life will awaken memories reughout Hungary and stimulate the national pride to an extent which canot fall to exert a lasting influence upon oyal house of Italy. In its immediate eighborhood are situated the residences of the Duke D'Assta and of the late Prince Amadeo, while King Humrva palace is also adjacent. in the center of the city itself stands the ancient building within whose walls Kossuth has found asylum and slitude for four-and-twenty years. The house is an ancient palace formerly coupled by some nobleman and now livided into apartments, or floors, which are let out to different tenants. he old stone front of the house, with to heavy cornices, is gray and stained the sun and rain of years. And yet here is nothing that can be described a really imposing or specially romantie about the aspect of the old palazzo. It is considerably in seed of repair and t is considerably in need of repair and a strongly suggestive of damp. Passing through the portion and ascending long wide flight of stone steps to the last landing. I was ushered by an old man into a reception room which opens from the last hand side of the outer hall. This room, which is quite small, a shadowely have of furniture.

I had not long to wait in the dreary manufacture, where the one solitary had not long to wait in the dreary sythm reem, where the one solitary not is a stand of tathered way fagrach, during the cirugale for freedom, and rictoriously over the patriot is of Hungary upon many glorious ds. Soon the venerable patriot ened, greeting me with a quiet dignity, a speaking in the Hing! A tangue, of lich he possessed a wonderful many. He invited the into his private on, where, I understood, he does not not only strangers, meet of whom not cet, any faciliar than the county reception room. This private chamber to entirely filled with desks, book cases and rows of pigeon holes, in which are arranged with systematic neutress a correspondence of many years with the most notable men of this century. Komuth is in constant correspondence with eminent persons all over the globe, and it is believed that this private room of his is a perfect treasure house of autograph letters of priceless value. It is also understood that filed away among the countiess pigeon holes, is Kossuth's entire correspondence with Bismarck, to whom, as the arbiter of arms in Europe, he appealed after 1870, seeking to induce the German chancelfor to bring every German nationality in Europe into the imperial federation Bismarck, however, replied that there "must always be two Germany's—the Prussians and the Southerners." Kossuth sat at a flat deak, carefully wrapped in a black rug, because of his tendency to suffer from chilis. His figure is much bowed with the weight of years and has grown corpulant. He wore a square black shull cap. Ills interest in current events everywhere is unabated; he knows what is transpiring in all countries. He said that the Hungarian people, who in spite of every obstacle have preserved their race, their language. their national costume, their custom and their traditions intact and pure, cannot fall at last to reguin their national treedom. No people in Europe, he claims, have equally preserved their in-dividuality. In this regard the Mag-yers stand almost alone. This is the one thousandth year of Hungarian autonomy, which, through all the vicissitudes of centuries, has never been lost. Kossuth longs to see his successor rise up before he dies. "That is what our country needs," said he; "for myself, I am almost ashamed to live longer, for I cannot lead my country-men now." He said that had he succeeded in his efforts to free Hungary, his first step thereafter should have been to advance on Poland to aid that country to renew her gle for freedom. He said that P should be independent if only for .a-reason that she would act as a barrier between the crar and Europe. For Austria he predicted final disintegration, saying that a country so devoid of homogeneity and composed of so many unassimilative elements, cannot stand the test of time. With German st Czech, Czech against Labemia and Magyar against all, Austrian empire is feredoomed. As to the Hapsburgs, he prophesies their early extinction as a dynasty. "The emperor," he said, "has never been king of Hungary than the day when I unconversed him in since the day when I uncrowned him in my address to the parliament at Euda Pesth."

Kossuth lives the life of a hermit, neither entertaining nor being entertained. Unquestionably he has developed many qualities of egotism. He regards himself as the sainted figure of history. So hermit-like are his habits that it is believed he will receive all the delegations of his countrymen, who will greet him on his coming birthday with messages of affection and tokens of respect, in the little bare reception room of his apartment in the old Turin palarzo, and that they will have to rest content with what they see of him there, as he comes to meet them, snowhaired, bowed and venerable, frem out the solltude of his sacred den, for it is not likely that he will consent to much public ceremonial or agree to participate in it himself.
